Our courts have carefully designed rules of discovery that guarantee equal access to the facts for everyone. These rules aren’t aspirational. They are rules of engagement designed to get to the truth. They recognize the reality of human conflict, and they channel the passions of those conflicts into controlled forums. If these rules are ignored, litigation becomes nothing more than an adolescent food fight. This book is a tool to assist practicing attorneys to understand the rules and case law that govern depositions. Understanding these rules will give lawyers the power to stand up to deposition obstruction and discover the truth on behalf of their clients.

Mark R. Kosieradzki joins trial teams throughout the United States assisting them with all aspects of their discovery and trial practice. Mark is a renowned faculty member at AAJ Education’s Advanced Depositions College and other AAJ continuing legal education programs. His book 30(B)(6): Deposing Corporations, Organizations & the Government has taught lawyers throughout the country how to cut through institutional obstruction.

Praise for depositions obstruction

“The birth of a classic—a manifesto of freedom from ever again being shoved around in a deposition.” – David Ball, author of David Ball on Damages

“Whether it be coaching objections or sneaky woodshedding during bathroom breaks, these and more obstructive techniques are brought into the light of day and beaten back with calm logic and profuse case law. This is an important book for anyone who takes depositions.” – Patrick Malone, author of The Fearless Cross-Examiner

“Mark provides solid, practical, and ethical ways to stop obstructions in deposition, but he does so much more. This book is a primer on all aspects of taking proper depositions under the rules. Every litigator should have a copy.” – Mark Lanier, recipient of the American Association for Justice Lifetime Achievement Award

FOCUS GROUPS Hitting the Bull’s-Eye

Why don’t lawyers do focus groups? Too expensive; I know what the winning arguments are; I know my case; I don’t need to know what jurors think; I already know what jurors think. Really? Unfortunately, this is the all-too-common mindset of many lawyers. In their experience, focus groups have been too expensive and have yielded results that are not especially helpful (beyond telling you that your case stinks). We think differently. We discuss and dismiss the myths about focus group research and suggest approaches that get you the information you need without spending a fortune. Your comfort level with the process, economics, and outcomes of focus groups will increase dramatically.

“This book carefully guides lawyers through the process of selecting and conducting their own focus groups on a variety of topics. Focus Groups: Hitting the Bull’s-Eye is a valuable pretrial tool to add to the cost-effective trial preparation of every case.” – Howard Nations, AAJ Lifetime Achievement Award recipient and Trial Lawyer Hall of Fame inductee

“Comprehensive and useful . . . invaluable information on every aspect and detail involved in the focus group process to give you maximum insight and results.” – William A. Barton, author of Recovering for Psychological Injuries
